Headline:
Feeling much colder.

Today:
Dry with sunny spells for many inland areas. Showers affecting north-facing coasts, especially in the east where they will be frequent with hail in places, reaching some central parts of England later. Feeling cold in brisk northerly winds.

Tonight:
Showers becoming mostly confined to the far southeast of England. Clear skies for many, with widespread frost across central and northern parts. Turning cloudy, damp and milder across northern Scotland.

Monday:
Many parts dry with plenty of sunshine, though showers still affecting the far southeast. Cloudy across northern Scotland with a little rain. Feeling rather cold, especially in the breezy south.

Outlook for Tuesday to Thursday:
Many places dry on Tuesday with the best of the sunshine in the south. Turning increasingly unsettled from the northwest midweek with some rain moving slowly southeast. Feeling rather cold.
